Controversy erupts over library employment practices

THE LIBRARY project under construction behind city hall is a focus of controversy over minority and local hiring practices. (John Perkins photo).

The contractor for the new Seaside Public Library and 13 sub-contractors pledged informally last week to make additional efforts to bring more minority and unemployed workers onto the project from Seaside.

At a meeting Wednesday at city hall attended by about 30 persons, the issues of hiring minority group members as well as putting Seaside's unemployment to work were discussed by city officials, who are monitoring the project, the contractor and sub-contractors, labor officials, and representatives of the Monterey County Affirmative Action Program.

Advocates of the hometown plan for increasing the percentage of minority group members among the construction trades argued that the contractor, the sub-contractors, and the unions had been remiss in meeting those requirements on the $455,000 library project started last July. The project is half completed.

Since a considerable amount of federal money was granted Seaside for the project through the Economic Development Administration, the federal guidelines for minority employment reflecting the ethnic composition of the community should also be met, the affirmative action spokesman argued.

But Cleve Williams, the city recreation director and staff person charged with monitoring employment reports on the project, asserted that the city and the contractors and sub-contractors were not in violation of the law, since good faith efforts to employ such people had been made.

"The city council and the city of Seaside, when it accepted federal funds, for the construction of the library, agreed not only in principle but to all aspects of the federal decree in all parts of the policy," stated Mayor B.J. Dolan.

"Several meetings have taken place on minorities not being on the job. I have stated that if the contractor (Hampshire Construction Co.) is in violation, they should correct the situation. Accusations were made that general labor was hired from King City, etc., and that black labor from Seaside, unemployed, was not being hired.

"I have just verified that the CETA jobs we had in this city had 400 who applied. And we've got some other jobs that are coming up--all in the domain where federal funds are used.

"I request we put out on the table the conditions that exist...and to avoid bringing about a halt to construction if we don't comply with the law."

The law involved stipulates that federal funds on a local project may be cut off if the ethnic composition of the labor unions working on that project is not in accord with the ethnic makeup of the community. Monterey County's affirmative action program has been working toward the goal of bringing more minority apprentices into the construction trades for several years.

Cleve Williams said the issues of requirements of the hometown plan (the affirmative action program) and those of the EDA had been confused.

"The basic problem is one of local labor," he said. "We are complying. We can't confuse the issue with the hometown plan. We're under the hometown plan. but we are also under EDA rules, which are entirely different. The contractor and the sub-contractors have made an honest effort to comply. The key issue here is local labor.

"The purpose of the EDA rules is to attempt to employ local people in unskilled labor. We're not specifically hiring from the area here, but we have to come up with some method of employing local people."

Tom Nash, a board member of the affirmative action program, pointed out that the unemployment rate in the minority community in Seaside is 27 per cent, and said "EDA orders and HUD orders say that the local labor should be used."

"This is not the hometown plan," declared City Councilman Steve Ross. "This is not only concerned with minorities. The community is unemployed and they need work. This project we got solely on that basis."

Ross said he will ask for a monthly report on the people hired on the project to determine their residence.

Architect Fred Keeble said his firm had requested the 13 sub-contractors on the project to meet "legal and moral obligations" involved.

"How can the contractor find people who are qualified?" Keeble asked. "This is skilled work."

Clint Porter, representing the affirmative action program, said "finding skilled labor in Seaside is probably impossible, but common laborers have been brought in here from out of town and put to work here in Seaside."

Porter urged the labor unions and sub-contractors to hire unskilled, unemployed, minority people from Seaside to give them the opportunity to learn a skill upon which they might later build a career.

"Since they haven't even been able to get into the union because they're unskilled, they will be able to get skills."

Russell Hansen, a labor representative on the affirmative action board of directors, said construction laborers must be skilled workers and pointed out that the various construction trades all have training programs.

"But there is no provision

City council alters voting policy

The Seaside city council fell into bickering again last week at its regular meeting--this time over city proclamations.

Things started popping when Councilman Oscar Lawson brought forward for council approval a resolution congratulating the Monterey Peninsula Choral Society on their success and wishing them well.

"We've had such requests in the past from organizations outside Seaside and we haven't made them, either by mayoral proclamation or council action," Mayor B.J. Dolan said. "In the future, we're not going to be able to say we can't endorse any organization requesting endorsement."

"The purpose here is to give support to their activities and to congratulate them on what they've done in the community," Lawson said. "This is a part of what we're here for...encouraging various organizations. I feel this is something that's our duty to encourage."

Councilman Glenn Olea said he was not opposed to the resolution, but that the council should give consideration to its implications for the future.

But Councilman Joe Cota accused Dolan of acting in a high-handed manner simply because resolution was suggested by Lawson.

"We know there has been no discussion ahead of time about your proclamations, Mr. Mayor," Cota told Dolan. "Now, because this is from Mr. Lawson, all of a sudden it's for us to determine whether it's worthwhile, because it's from Mr. Lawson. I see no problem here at all. It just says they're doing a good job."

Councilman Steve Ross said he supported the resolution.

"Many worthy causes go unnoticed and our resolutions could go unnoticed," Ross said. "It wouldn't hurt, if we go one way to consider it, we should go the other way."

After the resolution was finally approved, Mrs. Marion Flaherty, who accepted it on behalf of the organization, told the council:

"We're asking you to help build up an audience for our live choral performances here in Seaside. We are bringing you a cultural event for the benefit of your community."

Lawson also suggested later in the meeting that the council change its method of voting on commission appointments, from the current system of using numerical values, to some other. Lawson asserted, as he did at the last city council meeting, that that system results in unfair selection processes.

"The system of voting for appointments by points is manipulative, undemocratic, obsolete, and has tendencies of closed and secret government," Lawson charged. "I propose we discard this and use letters instead. At the present time, it's possible for two people to have their will over three others."

The motion was seconded by Councilman Joe Cota.

"I have no disagreement on addressing the technicality here," said Councilman Steve Ross. "This was a gentleman's agreement used in the caucuses and in the personnel sessions."

Ross said he could see that the potential for inequities exists in the present system, but claimed that none had resulted during his tenure on the council from the

Clark named to head planning commission; four use permits approved by planners

James Clark was elected chairman of the Seaside Planning Commission at its regular meeting Feb. 13. Elected as vice-chairman was Hisao Yamanishi.

The planning commisssion also approved four use permits and continued a request for a fifth. The permits approved are:

--An application by Harry Chastain to allow continued operation under new ownership of a Senor Taco restaurant located at 1742 Fremont. The restaurant is in the C-R-C district.

--A retail sales office for radio communications equipment requested by David L. Alexander, at 1123 Fremont. The location is within Seaside's H-S district.

--A request by George F. Phillips for a use variance to allow an addition to a conconforming structure in the residential district, at 1324 Waring.

--For the construction of a duplex on a non-conforming lot with a variance from the covered parking requirements in the R-2 district. The permit was requested by James M. Temple for a parcel at 122 Sonoma.

The planning commission continued a request for a use permit by Charles M. Kelly for the construction of a multi-structure, multiple complex in the R-4 district, until the next meeting, at the request of the applicant.

The last remaining bit of paperwork by the city for the clearance of "the Pit" also was completed by the planners. They accepted the vacation of a public alley situated to the rear of 1293 Broadway in the C-N district, and 1288 and 1292 Olympia in the R-4 district. That portion of alley is situated behind what will now become the county health and welfare building.

The planning commission also learned that the city staff has requested an opinion from the state attorney general's office about the legality for its request for exclusion from the State Coastal Zone Conservation Commission's area of authority, which extends 1,000 yards inland from the mean high tide line.

Affirmative action committee appointed

The city council appointed a committee last week to develop an affirmative action plan for the city and to implement it in order to increase the number of minority persons employed in Seaside.

The committee will consist of Clint Porter and Tom Nash of the Monterey County Affirmative Action Program, and Councilman Steve Ross, who made the motion for creation of the committee. The group will review existing plans for increasing minority employment on projects involving city funds and report to the council on suggested revisions.

"I recommend the council develop an affirmative action plan unique to the city of Seaside to include the economic disadvantaged," Ross proposed at the Thursday meeting of the city council. He also recommended that Mayor B.J. Dolan appoint a five-man committee for that purpose, and that a monthly report be made to the city council on the ethnic composition and place of residence of all employes on projects involving city funds.

City Mgr. Dudley Lapham said the city is now required to make reports on employment by Economic Development Administration guidelines on some projects, but not on others.

"We have almost ready a rework of an affirmative action program," he said. "It supplements the guidelines we've been using all along."

"My concern is that the major contractors may not be within the program," Ross explained. "This would apply to our internal affairs, to bridge the gap we have now. This is not aimed at any inequities within the city structure itself, but that should be included so no inequities develop."

A controversy surfaced last week concerning the extent to which the contractor and sub-contractors on the city library project are in compliance with the federal requirements that minority labor from the ranks of the unemployed in Seaside be used on that project.

"I'm completely sympathetic to this," Mayor Dolan said. "But there are some real legal questions. The city does development projects with federal funds, and we've got a number of contracts out...-those type we can specify. Other contractors come into the city and then bid to subs. I don't think you can mandate outside of those."

"There is no excuse that you can think of that keeps us from dealing with this for the city," Ross said.

City Atty. Carey Royster said the city has no to enforce minority employment figures among private contractors doing private jobs in the city. "I seriously doubt that the city has any police power in private contracts--just in public contracts," Royster said.

Dolan said the city has an affirmative action plan, but he admitted that "it's being overlooked."

"We do not have a plan

Compensatory education programs deemed successful

Reading and math compensatory education programs for disadvantaged youngsters appear to be achieving their purpose, Monterey School district trustees learned at their last regular meeting.

The program is under direction of special projects director Charlie Knight. The evaluation report showed median achievement gains of ESEA project students have not only exceeded expectations, of "disadvantaged" but are also above the expectations of "non-disadvantaged" levels. Students are in the ESEA program because they are reading below grade level. Evaluation results show that they are beginning to match other district students, due to participation in the vrogram.

Overall reading achievement gains for grades one through nine ESEA students have shown an increase over the past four years in the percentage of students making "substantial" gains, and a decrease in the percentage of students making "minimal" gains.

Reading achievement gains have increased over three years at a somewhat reduced cost per student, while math achievement-cost ratio remained the same for two years. Staffing changes occurring over four years showed marked increased in full and part-time instructional aide positions supported by projects funds.

Highest ESEA reading and math gains were at the primary and junior high levels. Since intermediate gains were not as great, even though they qere still above expected ESEA and non-ESEA levels, it was recommended that programs and staffing be studied to improve instruction at that level.

California state guidelines call for a minimum expenditure of $330 per ESEA student above regular school services, whether funds are from Title I or from a combination of sources. Of the ESEA funds available to the district last year 57 per cent was expended on reading instruction, 33 per cent on math, and 10 per cent on all other components including administration.

Marina Day Parade scheduled for April 27 this year

The Marina Day Parade Committee has announced plans for the annual parade taking place Sunday, April 27.

Now in its seventh year, the former Kiddie's Day parade has grown by leaps and bounds, and this year expects more than 150 entries. Last year's entrants came from as far away as Nevada and from all over the state of California.

Robert R. Robbins, parade committee chairman, said this year's parade theme of "Liberty" is in keeping with the growing activities leading towards the United States Bi-Centenniel celebrations in 1976.

Last year's parade drew approximately 5,000 spectators and estimates for this year range as high as 7,000.

Following the parade, which begins at 11 a.m., there will be a carnival with food and beverage stands, live entertainment and a barbecue feed behind the reviewing stand on Vista Del Camino.

The parade route will be the same as last year's, starting on Reservation Road at California Street, traveling west down Reservation to Vista Del Camino, turning right, passing the reviewing stand and then disbanding.

Trophies as well as cash awards will be presented by local civic leaders, business men and celebrities following the parade.

Any organization wishing to participate in the celebration can contact the parade committee at Post Office Box 87, Marina.

First female apprentice is no women's libber

Carolyn Kelly is the kind of woman women's lib is supposed to be all about, and yet she claims to be no advocate of the philosophy herself.

She's the first woman to be inducted into the construction trades in Monterey County through the affirmative action plan, the "hometown plan" launched in the early 1970s designed to raise the number of minority group members in the trades.

In those days, "minorities" was generally understood to mean blacks, Chicanos, and other minority races. Now, however, the concept has been expanded to include women as minorities in the sense that they're under-represented in the construction trades in proportion to their numbers in society.

With that rather late notion, architects of the affirmative action plan made waves for the distaff, and ran an advertisement for recruitment of women into the construction trades. Carolyn Kelly answered that ad, and became an apprentice with the Local 337 of the Cement Masons Union in Monterey.

Carolyn, a resident of Salinas, has reported dutifully to the local office each morning for the last three weeks in hopes of getting sent to a job, but so far has worked only one day--on the construction of a bridge on the freeway project through Marina.

But she's anything except discouraged; she figures it's just part of learning the trade. When she consented to an interview with The Seaside Post, she was playing a poker game with "the boys" at union hall after getting the word there would be no work that day.

CAROLYN KELLY

"I was actually thinking of going into carpentry," she said, "but I was told that cement finishing was steadier."

Carolyn graduated in 1969 from Alisal High School and worked for nearly a year in a physician's office in Salinas before coming to the realization that she'd rather have a blue collar job without a prestigious title and more money, than the other way around.

"I was making $400 a month in the doctor's office," she said. "This is supposed to be all right for a woman, but you can't live on it. Also, Im divorced with two daughters to support.

"Most women seem to feel they must have a job with prestige, but those jobs are usually low-paying. Working in an office, you don't have the physical part of it, but it's just as demanding mentally."

Carolyn said her reception as transgressor into a previously all-male bastion was not at all hostile.

"They asked: 'Is this your last day?' "

Carolyn said one of the things that prompted her to seek an apprenticeship with the Cement Masons Union was the fact that her father, a millwright, consistently brought home larger paychecks that she when she was employed as a receptionist.

Nevertheless, Carolyn said, she didn't even consider herself a women's libber when she did it, but was simply "looking for a good job." As an apprentice, she earns $5 per hour while learning her skill when the work is available.

"There's a lot of things I don't agree with about women's lib," she protested. "I don't feel women are always equal with men. We're in the role that men have cast us in as the housewife and mother. But if you're in the position where you must support yourself and your kids, then you should have the right to a job to support them, just the same as a man.

"But if I were with my husband, I would be content to stay home with my daughters."

Carolyn Kelly believes it's wrong for a woman to work and accept a salary as large as a man's when her husband is fully employed.

"I'm not in favor of a woman going out and earning as much as her husband; because there's always somebody else who needs it. If you've got enough money, why take somebody else's job?

"That should be one of the questions asked when you apply for work--whether your husband is employed. Because if a person is not working and they need the money, then they should have top priority.

"If I were rich, I couldn't take a job when somebody else needed it."

Although things are slow now for the Cement Masons Union, Carolyn expects to have more work for herself in the coming months when construction picks up, and during the summer. After a three-year apprenticeship, she will then be a journeyman cement mason.

'Carnival in Flanders'

"Carnival in Flanders" and "The Private Life of Henry VIII" will be the next films featured in Monterey Peninsula College's Spring Film Gallery of "Cinema Classics" at 8 p.m. Friday, Feb. 28 in the MPC Theatre.

"Carnival in Flanders" has been termed a triumph of wit and historical reconstruction. Suffused with the essence of both Breughel and Boccaccio, this tale of charmingly heroic wives and terrified burgher husbands deserves all the international honors it has received.

"The Private Life of Henry VIII" is a lavishly mounted picture of the Tudor court with beautiful and authentic sets. Charles Laughton gives a virtuoso performance as the roistering, gluttonous Henry which established his international reputation.

Admission to the films is $1 for adults and 50 cents for children under 12, ASMPC and Golden Card holders.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor:

I was recommended by my school to run in the Junior Miss Pageant. Four other girls from Seaside High School were in it. There were about nine other girls in the pageant. The choices were based on scholastic achievement, creative and performing arts, youth fitness, poise and appearance, and a six-minute judge's interview.

The pageant was held in the Carmel Sunset Center on Nov. 23. The first runner-up was Leanne Conrad from Seaside High School and I was the winner. As the representative from the Monterey Peninsula, I went to compete in the California Junior Miss contest at Santa Rosa. There were 79 girls. The winner from the pageant was Eddie Lehman from Arleta. This was the largest Junior Miss Pageant held so far. The pageant was sponsored by the Monterey Peninsula JC's.

I would like to thank the merchants who helped with my expenses and wardrobe while I stayed at Santa Rosa. It was the most beautiful experience of my life because you are there working with 79 girls, away from your parents, and have to depend on one another, and it was really hard to say goodbye to them.

It was also 10 days of the hardest work I have every done, with many rehearsals, luncheons, etc. Seaside Kiwanis presented to me $50 to assist with expenses and other service organizations on the Monterey Peninsula contributed also. I sang and played on the guitar, "I Don't Know How to Love Him."

Dear Editor:

Shirley Jean Wilson didn't have to die. At age 29, she should have lived another 40 or 50 years. A heroin pusher branded a habitual criminal in another state was the actual trigger man, and he will be the only one brought to trial for her murder, but he did not do the killing alone. He had a lot of help. The others involved can not be brought to trial.

Five months ago Preston Hall attacked Shirley with a pair of scissors, a deadly weapon by any standard. Two months ago he kidnapped her, took her to a deserted area, then beat her and tortured her with cigarette burns. A judge released him on $10,000 bail.

Six weeks later he attacked her again, this time with a knife. A judge set his bail at $50,000. He asked another judge for a reduction of bail, and it was granted. His bail was reduced to $2,500, which meant that by coming up with 10 per cent, or $250, he could get out, which he did. Eleven days later Preston Hall made a fourth try, this time with a .357 Magnum at Shirley Wilson's apartment, and now he won't have to try again, because Shirley Wilson is dead.

Now it is time for the bleeding hearts to come to Hall's defense, so that he can be rehabilitated back into his proper place in society to spare him the discomfort of going to prison for several years. At last report, he will recover from a bullet wound Shirley Wilson put in his chest while trying to protect herself, and already we are supposed to say that he is alleged to have killed her rather than that he killed her.

He is being furnished, at taxpayer expense, medical care and police protection around the clock. He will be furnished, again at public expense, an attorney to make sure he gets the benefit of every technicality and loophole available to him under our present system of criminal justice.

Shirley Wilson did not get the benefit of these technicalities and loopholes. It was almost as though there was a conspiracy to permit Preston Hall to try again and again with attacks on her life until he finally succeeded. Preston Hall will plead not guilty by reason of self-defense or temporary blackout or severe headaches from a boyhood injury, and within six or seven years he will be out on the streets again, enjoying the years of life that Shirley Wilson should have lived to enjoy.

And the system that contributed to her murder will go on, because not that many people care that justice and protection are 99 per cent for the criminals and only one per cent for the victims and the taxpayers who have to pay the bills.

The good lady is rightly concerned - yes the retired military has a "good deal," and let's keep it that way. The retired military gave many years of their lives to protect the interests of all Americans. Commissary privileges are one of the returns that a grateful America has seen fit to reward these people with. If these retirees had not fought and died for America, she would have no need to worry about her social security, there would be none. America and all of us would be applying to our captors for food and relief from dictatorship.

If the U.S. Government starts breaking its word on promises to the people that are willing to devote their lives to the public welfare, it will be very difficult to succeed with the "volunteer armed forces" plan. When the next emergency rolls around, maybe all the people will decide they want to shop with the "lowly civilian" and why fight?

Dear Editor:

Rustin's viewpoint that "blacks suffer in recession" is true. But so do many other Americans, though not to quite so great an extent as a group. For that matter, even in so-called "prosperous" times, many decent folks have insufficient income to live in proper dignity and well-being in our society.

I am not referring to that element in any country on earth that prefers to live by their dim wits -- the crooks, the thugs, those who prey like wild beast on society. I will let others shed copious tears in their behalf! People with much sentiment, but little sense, yes, confused ones whose hearts do not go out for the victims, but instead are filled with love for those who clobber, rape and rob them!

It must be said, if we are fair, that in the United States of America, much of the time the standard of living of most Americans is far higher than in most, if not all, lands. But it is also proper to mention that not all races or nationalities or faiths, that make up our "melting pot" share equally in such a living standard.

To complete the picture, we need to know that many millions of our citizens have a poor standard of living even in the best of times. And, in recessions and depressions their numbers increase greatly.

Our American Constitution guarantees free speech, assemblage, press, and worship of religion. Like anything guaranteed on paper, it takes life itself to make sure that it is realized. Citizens must be vigilant, and see to it that people are educated to appreciate these freedoms. And, that government tries sincerely to secure them for all.

I suggest that an amendment to the Constitution be enacted to include a guarantee of work for every person desiring it. And, at pay sufficient to give one a proper American standard of living. Thus, if private industry has no work for a citizen, government will provide a job at something useful for our country. Is not the right to make a good living as important, even more important, than some (or all) of the other rights guaranteed in the Constitution? Does it not belong alongside them in the document our nation uses as a guide and authority?

Seaside Alcoholism Recovery Association fills vital need

If alcoholism is a sickness, then alcoholism among the minorities might be understood as a manifestation of the social sickness that goes by the name of prejudice.

For there is a close link between the two: alcoholism and prejudice. In many ways, they feed upon each other and prevent a formidable barrier to the efforts of many hard-working, well-intentioned minority group members who would improve their lot in life.

That philosophy is at the base of the Seaside Alcoholism Recovery Association (SARA), which operates a small residential facility at 1105 Olympia St. for alcoholics. It's a small beginning and it's only been there since last November, but for Steve Ross and others, it's more like a dream of a lifetime come true.

Ross is director of SARA and a Seaside city councilman. He's been carrying the notion of establishing such a facility around with him for nearly 30 years, and SARA Cottage is the realization of that concept.

The officers of SARA are: Rosetta Sheppard, president, Tom Nash, vice-president, James Haynes, treasurer, and James H. Scruggs, secretary.

When Ross attended Salinas Junior College in 1946 (now Hartnell College), he lived in an area composed of field laborers and saw first-hand the terribly destructive effects of alcohol upon that group of people.

"Chinatown was booming, and guys would work all week, then get drunk and loose all their money and get busted, then bail out and start all over again," Ross recalled.

At about that time, Martin Dodd established Sun Street, a recovery center in the heart of Salinas' Chinatown district, which later became a trend-setting venture looked upon by many across the country as highly successful and innovative. Ross was in school with Dodd, and was exposed to many of his ideas about the treatment of alcoholism, and when he returned to the Monterey Peninsula, he tried to establish a similar program in Seaside.

At about that time, Ross had a harrowing experience which convinced him beyond any doubt that the problem was both serious and unchecked.

"I'd worked for a labor contractor, loading lettuce, when I was in Salinas just to get some extra money. He was a good, strong man, and he always made good money, but he lost it because of his drinking. I went back to Salinas and saw that man years later, with a cut-up face, all broken down, and he didn't even recognize me.

"That shook me up so bad I began to push the movement to get something done. I joined the alcoholism council, and I operated the community service center in Seaside."

Then, the first breakthrough happened. The alcoholism council installed a free telephone in the service center, where Ross and others operated a phone referral service for alcoholism problems. In 1970, William Trimiar, who had gone through Sun Street in Salinas, expressed an interest to Ross in working with the problem, and he joined the effort to establish an alcoholism recovery center in Seaside.

From May, 1971 to August, 1973 the Monterey County Task Force, Inc. operated an alcoholism recovery unit under Trimiar's direction out of the service center located at 1580 Del Monte Ave. on a volunteer basis. But then a small grant in the amount of $5,000 was given last year from the Monterey County Office of Community Services and SARA was launched.

That grant was followed by another $18,000 later last year, and the SARA Cottage was established. The facility can only handle up to two people a week, and these are carefully screened both for sobriety and for their intentious, Ross said.

Ross is encouraged that a beginning has been made, and he feels confident the program will grow in scope and effectiveness. At present, counseling is offered residents of SARA Cottage, as well as to members of the public at 8 p.m. Tuesdays. Extensive referral services are also available there.

"The psychological concern has not been there for treating poor people's alcoholism as a disease," Ross said. "Most of these people, when they used alcohol, were in an environment that resulted in confrontations with the police, and they usually have problems there, too.

"Minorities, blacks especially, are usually protestant, and the churches don't accept drinking in their philosophy, so the churches haven't any programs to deal with it. I think it will take a heavy educational process to get a relaxing of those views so we can really look at the

Wester named chairman of YMCA membership drive

Jim Wester of Western Volkswagen has been named the 1975 Chairman for the Monterey Peninsula YMCA Sustaining Membership Campaign, which began with a spaghetti dinner at the First Presbyterian Church at Qlta Mesa road and El Dorado last week.

"In this day of fast communication, many people still think of the YMCA in the terms of men's swim-gym," said William Berg, executive director of the Monterey YMCA, "when in fact the Monterey Peninsula YMCA is a part of a changing and growing national YMCA with 30 per cent of its membership women; family programs are expanding and there are over 8 million members across the United States."

The fastest growing category of members continues to be family memberships. A marked increase in the Monterey Peninsula YMCA programming reflects this with 559 families involved in Y programs in 1974. A total of 250 families sent youngsters to the Y's summer camping programs and the Y-Indian Guides, for instance, now includes the Y-Indian Princesses and the Y-Trail Blazers.

Programs designed specifically to improve relationships inside the family, such as "Family Focus" will also be conducted locally by trained leaders.

Even YMCA camping, once mostly the prerogative of boys who looked forward to "going away" for a week or two, has expanded to include day campers, residence and caravan camping and snow trips, and now includes women and girls, sometimes as part of family camping ventures.

"In a period when many authorities feel that the American family is in trouble and the forces of changing tastes and values tend to pull it apart, programs that bring families together for enjoyment and greater understanding of each other are more important than ever," said Berg, "that's why the YMCA has for one of its goals: to strengthen family structures by enhancing relationships and improving communities."

Current program goals of the Monterey Peninsula YMCA are: developing new programs and increasing the effectiveness of existing programs which will aid in the strengthening of family life; developing a continuing experience in outdoor education through a graduated camping program; developing programs and plans for facilities that speak to the continuing concern of the YMCA for the health and fitness of all persons and developing and emphasizing Christian principles in the implementation of all YMCA programs.

Experience in YMCA activities makes for growth and self-confidence and has been happening to youngsters for the past 130 years. In 1974, a total of 536 Sustaining Members made it possible for the Monterey Peninsula YMCA to extend its programs to youngsters who might not have had it available otherwise.

Post photographer honored by Fort Ord

Seaside photographer John Perkins is being honored this month with an exhibit of his work at the Ford Ord Arts and Crafts building.

Perkins, who is also staff photographer for the Seaside Post, said the show represents some of his best color portraiture and studio work from the past several years. The energetic Perkins hung all the pictures and lights himself, and is justifiably proud of the exhibit.

Perkins launched his career as a photographer about 10 years ago when he was a janitor. Now, he operates the only full-color photographic processing lab on the Monterey Peninsula, and a thriving business.

Perkins is practically a paradigm of the self-made man. When he started his photographic career, he had to learn what he could from reading encyclopedias and whatever advice camera store employes could give.

His first few photos came out mostly black, or mostly purple, but he stuck to it until his proficiency increased to the point at which he is now able to produce startlingly life-like portraits in full color.

With a $5 camera, Perkins took some pictures for his wife's social club, and soon realized that if he was to be called upon to give that service repeatedly, he'd be better off learning something about the art of photography.

He read everything he could get his hands on about photography, took courses at Monterey Peninsula College and through the New York Photographic Institute. He hounded everyone who knew anything about photography for explanations when things went wrong.

Eventually, things started to go right, and Perkins invested the money that came in from his business into more equipment. He now has some $40,000 worth of photo equipment on hand.

One of the photographs in the Fort Ord exhibit is a night scene along Seaside's Fremont Boulevard. It is an arresting combination of street lights, darkness, and streaks of light from passing cars. Perkins said the picture was taken under extraordinary circumstances that have become almost commonplace with him.

Perkins went out one night after a rainstorm, when the ion particles in the atmosphere were at a low level, for anight photo. He knew next to nothing about how he would get the picture, he said, but as he drove along, something inside him began calculating the precise timing, shutter speed, distance, and technique. By the time he reached the point where he would set up the camera, that inner voice had given him all the details he needed.

He set up his camera and followed what that voice had told him, not sure whether the

Seniors to convene in south Monterey County

Keynoting the Southern Monterey County Senior Convention to be held February 16, will be Third District County Supervisor Dusan Petrovic. Also featured will be Rick May, Congressman Talcott's district representative.

Mayor Chauncey McDonald of Greenfield will give the welcome address, and the Mayors and Councilpersons of Gonzales, Soledad, Greenfield and King City are also invited. Members of the newly-appointed Senior Citizens Advisory Commission of Monterey County are also slated.

The first annual Senior Convention will begin at 11:30 a.m. and last until 2:30 p.m. at Greenfield Memorial Hall in Greenfield. The convention has a three-fold purpose-- to inform the Senior Citizens of South Monterey County of the services available to them; to familiarize service providers and policymakers with the needs and difficulties of South County seniors; and, to familiarize service providers and policy-makers with one another, and hopefully coordinate the delivery of services to South County Senior Citizens.

The program will include nine discussion group areas, covering--food facts, income ideas, health, housing, legal services, transportation, recreation, clubs and organizations, and people programs. Seniors may participate in three discussion group seminars which will last 30 minutes and have from three to five "experts" to explain these three areas.

Besides the explanations, there will be ample time for seniors to discuss the services and the types of services that could be provided in South Monterey County. Seniors will be free to move from one area of interest to another during the allotted half hour time, and a brief summary sheet of all the agencies participating will be available (in English and Spanish).

Transportation will be available for those who need it, if they return one of the invitations found in the pocket of the posters advertising the convention, or if they meet at the pick-up sites on the morning of Feb. 26 in Gonzales at the Senior Center at 10:15 a.m., in Soledad at the Senior Center at 10:30 a.m., and in King City at the Production Credit Office at 10:30 a.m.

A free luncheon will be provided for seniors sponsored by the service clubs and cities of King City, Greenfield, Soledad, and Gonzales. Training monies have also been provided by the Gerontology Training Project at San Jose State University, headed by Dr. Bonnie Russell. Translation services are being provided by Students of the Bi-Lingual Department of Gonzales High School.

The program committee for the convention consists of representatives in the recreation department of each city, Alliance on Aging, Community Service and Department of Social Services staff.

Guest speaker coming to photo lecture

Arnold Newman, portraitist and author of "One Mind's Eye," will be the next guest speaker in the photo-lecture series "Photography Viewpoints," at 8 p.m. Friday, Feb. 28 in Monterey Peninsula College's Lecture Forum 102. The series is being co-sponsored by the Friends of Photography and MPC.

Rodney Stuart, curator for the Friends of Photography, said Newman's lecture is titled "What is a Portrait?" and will cover the broad range of portraits, with emphasis on individual portraits. Stuart said Newman will attempt to define and answer the questions of what a portrait is, its various aspects and how it deals with people.

Stuart said the series is being supported this year by a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts and has been organized by the Friends of Photography. The next speaker in the series will be Duane Michals whose topic will be "The Imagination in Photography," on March 14.

Admission is $3 general and $2 for students and senior citizens.

Hannon Homemakers change name

The Hannon Homeowners and Occupants Association of Seaside voted to change the name of the association to the Seaside Homeowners Association, with a Post Office number 141. President Robert Brown said this was done to help the entire city, which has always been the purpose of the association.

"We feel that the whole city needs strength and the homeowners are the ones that suffer when we do not show our concern. We are asking all homeowners and occupants to write to the president, Seaside Homeowner's Association, PO. Box 141, Seaside, or call Mr. Brown, 394-4719, or Mr. Johnson (Vice-President) 394-3923 after 5 p.m. for any information about the function of the association," Brown said.

Bach Lyceum to feature young musicians of area

A unique experience for young music students of the Monterey Peninsula area will again be offered by the Lyceum of the Monterey Peninsula, co-sponsored by the Carmel Bach Festival, in a summer program of choral and instrumental workshops to be held in Carmel.

Purpose of the program, now in its fifth season of cosponsorship with the festival, is to provide opportunities for advanced instrumental instruction and ensemble playing, and advanced vocal instruction and performance, together with encouragement in the individual student's pursuit of music. Talent will be sought rather than degree of advancement in performance.

Instrumental music students (piano excepted) entering grades seven through 12 in the fall, or currently in grade 12, are eligible to apply. Eligible voice students and members of school or church choral groups are those entering grades 10 through 13 or currently in grade 14.

The choral workshop, to be held June 16 to June 27, will be directed by Priscilla Salgo, who also directs the Carmel Bach Festival Chorale. Mrs. Salgo will be assisted by three professional clinicians selected from the Festival Chorale.

Fred Schlichting, director of music in the Clover Park Schools near Tacoma, Wash., will direct the instrumental workshop June 23 to July 11, assisted by members of the festival orchestra. Sandor Salgo, the festival's conductor and music director since 1956, will serve as executive director of both workshops and will do some conducting with the instrumental students.

Voice students will receive instruction in choral singing and directing, private instruction in vocal techniques and skills, group instruction, introduction to music theory and music history, sight reading and musical notation. Instrumental students will be rehearsed in group and ensemble playing, including some of the festival music; group and private instruction, listening perception, music theory and history. Summer school credit can be arranged for participation in either workshop.

There is no tuition for the workshops. There will be, however, a $35 registration fee for instrumental students and a $25 fee for choral students which prartially covers program expenses. The balance is contributed in various ways by the community and by private donations.

Students will be accepted on the basis of their application information and through auditions. Auditions for instrumental students will be held Saturday, April 5, at Monterey High School music department; for voice students Saturday, April 12, at Seaside High School music department.

Further information and applications are available from the Lyceum of the Monterey Peninsula, 24945 Valley Way, Carmel, or by calling 624-2403.

Ross said a group of young ministers in Chicago in the 1960s was subjected to a living experience in alcoholism. They were set out on the street, just as someone might be who has been released from jail after being arrested for drunkeness and then forced to live in a ghetto environment. Within a few weeks, most of the ministers had taken up the bottle, themselves.

"I believe it will also take a heavy educational process to get the minorities to sit down and discuss alcohol and where it leads them," Ross observed. "It affects their economic plight, but many people have to stay drunk just to stay in their environment."

that gives the employers additional money for training, and they must also come up with competitive bids," Hanses said.

"The Office of Federal Contact Compliance says the record is clean," Williams said. "It's a matter of increasing the number of people coming onto the job from Seaside."

"The men here are in compliance with the hometown plan," said Sal Palacios, executive director of the affirmative action program, "but we're saying that 40 per cent of the people hired will be minorities, by EDA regulations."

Frank Hobbs, president of Hampshire Construction Co., said all the sub-contractors have to do their hiring through the unions and they all require skilled labor. "If they're not here, they must come from somewhere else.

"We've been working on all our subcontractors, trying to get them to hire these people. I don't know how we can do it," Hobbs said.

"The problem here is implementation," said City Councilman Glenn Olea. "The people in Seaside must be given the opportunity to get into a job, then we can determine whether they're skilled. The problem here is that the minorities are not given the opportunity to land a job.

Williams suggested that the contractor and the subcontractors work more closely with the affirmative action representatives and the labor unions in seeking unemployed minority people from Seaside.

'If somebody would give us information on the qualified unemployed, we'd hire them," Hobbs said. "All we have are persons who are qualifiable by virtue of their entry into the union."

"We're going to have to do something we haven't done before," Ross said. "We're all going to have to sacrifice something. If we're not doing it, we're just exercising, and exercising will run out."

"The EDA deals with the equipment of local labor," Williams asserted. "If we hadn't written the contract in a certain way, we wouldn't be getting a library for the kids here. You guys should work this out among yourselves.

"Don't keep coming back to the city and laying the burden on us, because that's not where it belongs."

At the urging of City Mgr. Dudley Lapham and Cleve Williams, the contractor and sub-contractors agreed to work more diligently to bring more local, unemployed minority people onto the project.

within the context I'm talking about," Ross said.

Councilman Joe Cota said it would be "interesting" for the city to have a report from contractors in the city on a voluntary basis, since "you'll get a picture of outside contractors coming into our city and using workers from all over--San Jose, King City, all over."

The vote to create the committee was unanimous.

'The Age of Reason' to be discussed

"The Age of Reason - Part II" is the topic of the next unit of Gentrain, Monterey Peninsula College's general humanities studies program. Classes begin at 10 a.m. Tuesday, March 4 in Lecture Forum 102 at MPC.

Robert Nelson, Gentrain director, described "The Age of Reason - Part II" as the period where Louis XIV had illuminated his age and made France the epicenter of intellectualism and artistic achievement.

"During most of the century the French continued to pursue 'absolute' standards, in government and in all aspects of French life. The pursuit of all intellectual activities was carried on in the academic system established by Louis XIV according to standards based on the tenets of classicism.

"Especially in France, it was the twilight of the Age of Divine Right of Kings. The Age of Reason also spawned the very ideas that would develop the tensions of the last part of the century which would lead to the Age of Revolutions in the 19th Century," Nelson said.

The course is open to students for college credit and to community members on a non-credit basis, for those persons who are just interested in learning more about their world. No tests or papers are required under this option, Nelson said.

For more information, call the Gentrain Information Center at 649-1150, ext. 338.

"It's never happened in a vote that I know of in the 11 years I've been here," Ross said. "No voting process had prevailed over the majority, that I know of."

Councilman Glenn Olea defended the present system and said "this is fair enough. I don't see any reason to make changes in the present system."

There was a clash of wills at the last council meeting over Mayor B.J. Dolan's announcement that he intends to make all appointments to city commissions himself, in accord with state law. Lawson said then that his decision was unfair to other councilmen.

"I intend to be very democratic and to do exactly what I said I would do," Dolan said, "to work for the best interests of this city. Until I'm defeated or step down, I will perform my duties. If there are those who think they can change that, let them try."

Lawson's motion to alter the method of voting on commission appointments was passed on a 3-2 vote, with Dolan and Olea voting against it, and Lawson, Cota and Ross voting in favor of the change.

Bad habits kill good people.

Too many pills. Too many drugs. Too many drinks. When they don't kill, they maim. The nervous system. The body chemistry. The emotions. And the mind.

The only way to make things better is to start getting sensible about ourselves. If you're taking prescription drugs, follow the prescription. If you're having trouble, see your doctor. If you drink, do it in moderation. And remember, even over-the-counter drugs can be addictive.

Many local health departments have treatment programs. And if you write to the address shown below, we'll send you a free directory of other helping agencies.

You see, bad habits kill good people. And we'd rather you weren't among them.

"No bank is safer than the biggest bank. And it's my bank."

Bonita L. Turner

Since Bank of America happens to be the nation's biggest bank, it only stands to reason that your money should be at Bank of America, too. Where it's nice and safe.

No other bank or savings & loan in the state comes close to Bank of America when it comes to assets.

And every single Bank of America savings account is insured up to $40,000 by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Should you decide that more than one savings account is just what your family needs, there's even more insurance. For example, with separate accounts for a family of three, you can have $400,000 insured by this same F.D.I.C.

Open an account at any of the more than 1,000 Bank of America offices. And have the safety of the biggest bank.

You can't get any safer.
